Defending academic and medical independence in Turkey

We write on behalf of 207 health professionals, academics, and researchers, and 25 health and human rights organisations from many countries (appendix). We wish to bring to the attention of The Lancet's readers alarming events taking place in Turkey, where the state has been waging a campaign of terror and punishment against thousands of health professionals and academics.

Following the coup attempt on July 15, 2016, the Turkish Government imposed various measures as part of a temporary state of emergency. However, these measures have been extended to undermine civil liberties and democracy. Among other actions, tens of thousands of public servants have been dismissed without explanation or due process. There have also been 63 blanket curfews imposed on towns such as Cizre, Silvan, and Sur, affecting over 1.8 million people.

As part of this crackdown, 463 academics have been dismissed (11 of them have been recently suspended from their work, which is often a precursor to dismissal),3 for having signed a declaration for peace under the banner of "Academics for Peace". Notably, this declaration was made in January, 2016, several months before the attempted coup. Many of the 463 dismissed academics have been banned from travelling via the cancellation of their passports. Among those previously dismissed and recently suspended are a number of academic physicians who are all highly respected doctors with international reputations. Additionally, many medical international non-governmental organisations have been banned from working in Turkey.

The Turkish Medical Association has called on all parties to protect the professional autonomy of healthcare workers to provide health care, respect their professional autonomy, obey liabilities originating from international legislation, investigate any violations urgently, and identify violators.<sup>4</sup>

The attack by the Turkish state on academic freedom and freedom of speech is part of a wider attack on democracy that has been documented by Amnesty International.<sup>5</sup> However, these developments cannot be viewed simply as a national problem. They are also part of a worrying trend towards authoritarianism in several parts of the world.

The international academic community cannot stay silent. We must react strongly by expressing our disapproval to the Government and universities of Turkey, requesting the immediate reinstatement and standing in solidarity with our colleagues and fellow professionals who have lost their jobs, as well as insisting that restitution of civil rights is a prerequisite for the right to health.

CB and DS are co-chairs of the People's Health Movement. We declare no competing interests.

Preventing stolen childhood

We read with interest The Lancet Editorial (June 10, p 2264)<sup>1</sup> on the End of Childhood Report 2017 by Save the Children,<sup>2</sup> which assesses major risks threatening children's wellbeing. In the report, Greece, which is experiencing an unprecedented socioeconomic crisis with profound detrimental effects on all aspects of everyday life,<sup>3</sup> was ranked 18th among 172 countries assessed, while Denmark was 21st, the UK 23rd, and Latvia 30th.

A report done on behalf of UNICEF shows that almost one in two children in Greece (45%) lived in material deprivation and 22% lived in severe material deprivation.<sup>4</sup> In Denmark, 8.5% of children were in material deprivation, whereas 3.7% were severely deprived. According to Eurostat,<sup>5</sup> the highest increase in atrisk-of-poverty or social exclusion rates was recorded in Greece (from 28.7% in 2010 to 37.8% in 2015), and the largest decrease was observed in Latvia (from 42.2% to 31.3%).

The End of Childhood Report uses seven severe consequences of child neglect, abuse, and deprivation. For instance, stunting, which was chosen as the indicator of child malnourishment, is rare in developed countries. However, malnutrition exists in Greece; since
